POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT
"FOR COMMUNITIES WITH ONLY ONE ZIP CODE NUMBER:

"Our five-digit ZIP Code is (93921), Postmaster (Fred Strong) announced today.

" 'Everyone in (Carmel, California) will use this ZIP Code on all their correspondence to speed mail deliveries and reduce the chance of mis-sent mail,' Postmaster (Strong) said.

"ZIP Code, the Post Office Department's revolutionary new system of improved mail dispatch and delivery, goes into effect nationally on 1 July.

"The Postmaster (Fred Strong) stressed the importance of all citizens of (Carmel) learning this city's ZIP Code and using it in their return address on all correspondence. In answering mail, he said, ZIP Codes taken from return addresses on incoming mail should be used.

" 'The ZIP Code is literally the last word in mail addressing,' Mr. (Strong) said. 'It should follow the city and state in addresses.'

"He cited this example of the proper use of ZIP Code:
(Your Name) Fred G. Strong
Postmaster
(Your City) Carmel, (Your State) Calif.
(Your ZIP Code) 93921"

(The foregoing is an excerpt, heavy with portent, from the official news release of the Post Office Department, announcing the seizure of the last outpost of individuality by a hostile force of numbers. Forsooth — as the Bible says — our days are numbered. And so are we.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue has replaced our names with Social Security numbers; the Telephone Company has dropped prefixes for digits; and now, ZIP!, our addresses are gone.

It is done, we are told with uncomfortable assurance, because there are too many of us, we are unpredictable and undependable, and the System (actually, there are many Systems), finds this an intolerable state of affairs.

Well, this constitutes almost total encirclement. Not only have we been out-maneuvered, we are now out-numbered.

It is well, therefore, that we remember our reputation as being among the more adaptable species (see also: fleas, lizards) and consider at once what adaptations must be made of our more important social institutions, such as cocktail party conversations or chatting at teas of the ladies' sodality.

SCANDALOUS ACT BY CITY COUNCIL

The present City Council is going to be distinguished for a long time. It is going to be distinguished for its contempt for the electorate, the taxpayer and good manners.

Having appointed a City Clerk without giving interested citizens a referendum; having appointed a City Councilman without giving the people a referendum; yesterday they rushed through first reading an ordinance increasing City salaries which will, in effect, raise the tax rate about 12 cents (product, about $23,000) without giving the people either a referendum by public acclaim or any anticipation of the momentousness of their act.

It was not until last Monday night that the magnitude of the salary increases proposed in the previous week was made public; they would raise the tax rate a wild and irresponsible 14.3%. The excuse is now being made that this would increase the rate only to about 96 cents, where it was in 1959-60. But, in 1959-60 the assessment role was some $5,000,000 less than if is now, and the sales tax was bringing in perhaps $15,000 less than it is now.

The justification is also being given that the tax rate remains well below that of other Peninsula cities. So does Carmel's rate of crime, but nobody is urging that this gives the city a certain felonious tolerance before anybody needs to become concerned.

The arguments for raises may be persuasive, and the increases may be warranted, but some people are already crying that the City Council, which traditionally is supposed to give the public full

The Day the Bombe (or Charlotte Russe) Falls

By Larry Rose, Andre Hope, Howard Brunn, Barry Goldwater, Herb Caen, Claire Engle, Chuck De Galle and Mac Glotz

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea — which is you and me at such times as taxes are to be paid, bombs are to be dodged and "we, the people" are referred to with delicate indulgence — has a dandy Civil Defense Program.

It consists of mountains of paper, a chairman, a committee, a budget, shelter signs, and one shelter (for 30 persons) which is not stocked and not marked, because the committee can count.

The committee has come to the shattering conclusion that 4,500 Carmelites, plus 6,000 tourists, in addition to 500 dogs, 1,000 cats, the ghost of Perry Newberry and the indefatigable spirit of the United Nations cannot simultaneously be crowded into a 30-person shelter if the bomb falls or Jimmy Hoffa comes to town. Therefore, reasons the committee, let's not let the people know where the shelter is, because it is better to lose 30 than to save none.

THE COMMITTEE THINKS

The committee has taken a year by the calendar, hundreds of dollars by the budget, hours and hours of meetings, acres of minutes and an imponderable amount of shuffling, ordering, filing, compiling and throat-clearing to reach this conclusion.

But don't kid yourself that everybody on the committee is so oblivious as to be happy with these consequences; they are not.

One thing they should all be happy about, however, they have a phone number, in addition to the signs in city hall which say "Shelter." (Considering where they are at the present, that's almost amusing.)

TICK-TICK-TICK

Iet us assume that a black, ominous and ticking tub falls from the sky and lies panting, sighing and rumbling in your back yard. Also, it trembles and throbs from time to time.

This distresses you.

You have three courses of action, then. You can dig a hole and bury it, pretending it never fell from the sky; you can call Adams & Sellards and have them haul it

"Oh, where are the artists, the sculptors, the scribes," a tourist once asked me to tell; "the long-bearded poets this booklet describes, the craftsmen who live in Carmel?"

I answered: Just follow your nose and your feet, go into the stores and the shops; go stroll through the alleys or walk down the street, and don't under-estimate cops.

The lady who sold you that vase or your bra might yet have exhibits in Rome; the man in the apron, the chap in the bar, they look like the tradesmen at home;

And some of the artists hide up in the hills and seldom come venturing down, except to go shopping or paying their bills — disguised like the tourists in town.

You never can tell by the shape of the moon what apples will grow on a tree; and the chap sitting next to you eating at noon could be William Shakespeare — or me.

TRAFFIC

Slow Down

New speed zones have been established on State Sign Route 68, approximately midway between Salinas and Monterey, following a recent traffic study by Division of Highways Engineers.

A 55-mile speed zone has been established between a point about 1/3 of a mile west of Corral de Tierra Road, to a point nearly one mile east of Torro Creek Bridge, replacing a former 65-mile speed zone.

The new zones were established by the Division of Highways after being determined, upon the basis of an Engineering and Traffic Survey, as appropriate to insure the orderly and safe movement of traffic on the existing highway. Traffic speed signs were installed Monday.

EVENTS

Beautiful Cleavages

New exhibits of miocene fossils from the central California coast area and ores from the Tri-State Zinc District are now on display at the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History.

The comparatively recent fossils date in age from 11-25 million years and are composed of a small selection of beautifully preserved marine fossils and petrified wood. Large portions of Monterey County and the Central Coast area were covered by ocean during miocene time as evidenced by the abundance of fossil shell material found here.

The Tri-State Zinc District refers to the rich mining portions of Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, which have produced over one billion dollars worth of lead and zinc. The minerals on exhibit are the spectacular types showing beautiful cleavages of galena, sphalerite, marcasite and associations. The mineral specimens were a recent gift from Dr. W. N. Beekman of Pacific Grove.

The museum is located at the corner of Forest and Central avenues in Pacific Grove. Hours are 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily except Monday. Admission is free.

HUNTING

Frontier Justice

Sportsmen who might think California fines for hunting and fishing law violations are too stiff should take a look at the penalties being meted out by the Arizona Game and Fish Commission.

A Phoenix guide lost his guide license privileges for five years for releasing a mountain lion for paying customers to shoot, and for keeping several other cats in captivity illegally.

A Tempe hunter lost his license privileges for two years for taking a deer out of season, and two Phoenix hunters lost their license privileges for three years after being convicted of destroying private property (a fence) while hunting.

Five year suspensions of license privileges were given the following: two Heber hunters for illegally taking a cow elk, two Yuma residents for taking a deer out of season, and three Williams hunters for taking an elk illegally.

Arizona Commission Chairman Harry Funk said that although the commissioners hated to take a man's license away from him, it was their obligation to enforce the law to the fullest in these cases of serious and deliberate violations in order to discourage others from committing similar violations in the future.

The Liveliest Art

Arthur Knight, film critic for The Saturday Review for the past 12 years, professor of motion pictures at the University of Southern California, and author of "The Liveliest Art," will lecture at Monterey Peninsula College on Friday.

He will discuss "The Western Film" at 8 p.m. in the MPC Music Hall, illustrating his talk with two films on Billy the Kid. His lecture is the first of a summer series of three programs on "The American Film."

Persons wishing to attend Friday night's program and/or the entire series may ask for tickets at the college administration building or write the Director of the Summer Session, Monterey Peninsula College, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope. There is no admission charge.

Knight is recognized both here and abroad as one of the leading authorities in the motion picture medium. In 1958 he received the Screen Directors Guild Critics Award for his "distinguished contributions to motion picture criticism." In 1955 and 1957, he was invited to serve on the International Jury of the Venice Film Festival — the first American to be so honored.

His articles on movies have appeared in leading publications, and he has contributed to the motion picture sections of five leading American encyclopedias, as well as the Encyclopedia Brittanica. He has served as film consultant for TV, has conducted his own weekly radio show, "Knight at the Movies," in New York, and has made innumerable guest appearances on both radio and TV. He brings to the lecture platform an informed, objective and articulate scrutiny of the movies and their makers.

One of the films he will show during Friday's lecture is a humorous cartoon. The other is a psychologically fascinating study of Billy the Kid — the best and least known—called "The Left Handed Gun."

Subsequent "American Film" programs are scheduled for 12 July ("Silent and Musical Comedy") and 26 July ("New Directions.").

Art Association

This month's exhibit of paintings are those of Laura Maxwell. Mrs. Maxwell, an outstanding member of the Carmel Art Association, was one of the first artists to open her Carmel studio to the public.

New Art Group in S.F.

9 through 31 July will see the first exhibition of the newly formed West Coast Watercolor Society in the library of the Crown Zellerbach Building, San Francisco.

The society was formed early this year by a few Bay Area artists. Its membership now includes 36 who are chosen by invitation only.

Nat Levy, president, states that the new group has been formed for the primary purpose of exhibiting transparent watercolors, a medium that seems to be increasingly eliminated from the competitive exhibitions by the heavier casein and synthetic paintings. Not only are annual exhibitions planned, but also secondary traveling shows throughout the year.

Numbered among the illustrious members are George Post and Elliot O'Hara who have exhibited and taught classes in Carmel, as well as Rollin Pickford Jr. and Donald Teague.

SPORTS CARS

BY ED LESLIE

Wheels are for rolling. Maybe that's why they are round. They are at the corners of your car primarily 'cause they'd look terrible if they were all in the middle.

That's what I thought about the wheels until a bit ago. I found that tires were part of the wheels, and that all tires were not alike. About the same time I bought a sports car and discovered the low-profile, steel ply, Michelin X with their fantastic wear-ability and wet weather ability. Since those days a few years ago, the tire, the wheel and the suspension have made revolutionary (joke!) advances.

Ever hear of unsprung weight? Well, all the weight that your car has is either sprung, like the frame, body, engine, etc., or unsprung, like the suspension arms, brakes, hubs, rims and tires. The less unsprung weight your designer can come up with, the better he can keep the wheels on the ground, and the better the car will corner, accelerate and brake. So-o today's race cars have magnesium wheels, 7-pound-rims made by American wheels in the Bay Area are showing up on all the "sharp" cars from Avanti to Corvette. Notice them?

Tires have come down in diameter to about 13 to 15 inches. Their section, or width, has increased greatly in an effort to keep more rubber on the ground, which is feasible with the wider width rims that are available. Lighter casings on the tires make sense with the stronger materials available for cording, and many a tire you ride on today says "4 ply rating" instead of "4 ply." Notice?

You can buy tires with slip angles for racing. The tire breaks into a slide gradually so that you don't go crunching into the bank on a race track, but have a bit of warning when the grip on the road has been lost. Some tires for street use hold onto the road so tenaciously that when they let go you are already gone! Let's just say they don't give enough warning to use in racing.

Tires that were tip-top three years ago, lasted 20,000 miles and were expensive, are now running second choice to some of our California recappers products, even at clearance prices. What has happened is the result of the dragsters, and of Grand Prix racing.

Scandalous Act . . .

information and adequate notice before acting on major issues, has displayed scandalous irresponsibility in this matter.

To the heads of departments go the most generous increases. A 3% increase in the present scale would have provided a five-step range of $587-$706. But now the Council has enacted a six-step range, increased the increment between steps from approximately 4% to 6%, and tacked on approximately $30 a month in general increases. The result is a schedule for department heads which ranges from $615 to $802. Earlier in the month, the Council increased the supplementary salary of Hugh Bayless as Secretary to Boards and Commissions from $135 a month to $150 a month — even though the termination of the Recreation Commission and the proposed designation of Floyd Adams as Planning and Zoning Director has materially reduced the work and responsibilities of Bayless, who has a base salary of $600 as Administrative Assistant to the City Clerk.

Salaries will now go above the quarter-million mark for the 47 employees of the City. And whether there was merit or justification is apparently not going to be something which the Council, in its extraordinary wisdom, is going to permit the taxpayer to ponder. The new schedule is effective on 1 July, in just four days.

Most Carmelites will agree that the several department heads, competent, loyal and responsible, deserve everything the City can afford to pay them — which apparently is going to include the shirt off our backs.

The Day

away; or you can call Civil Defense.

Let us suppose you do the most courageous thing, you call Civil Defense.

Know what will happen?

You will get a recorded voice saying, "This is a recording. Wait for ten seconds, then speak your message clearly. We will call you back."

You're not a Carmelite if your response is not approximately, "There's a hydrogen bomb in my back yard going thump-thump-thump-brrr-tick-tick-tick. Tick. I thought you might want to know, because it might blow the world to hell without a use permit before you call back. If I don't answer, you'll know why."

Now, according to the way our local Civil Defense has it figured, if you are one of the thirty who can fit into the un-named shelter (we'll tell you in a while where it is, and security secrets be damned) you will probably walk — certainly not run — for shelter.

WATER THE DAMNED THING

Otherwise, you will throw a bucket of water on the obscene thing and go back to your morning TV drama, like a proper Carmelite.

There is no flaw in the bucket of water. It indicates a supreme contempt which is as invincible as it is impracticable. The Pine Cone cannot improve on it. Indeed, the Pine Cone salutes it.

(Salute.)

But, if you should head for shelter the Pine Cone wishes that you go not unprepared. This is more than the local civil defense wishes. They wish that you not go at all. Because there is only room for thirty.

Nevertheless, there you are in the basement of the Purity groc-

The Great Securities Mystery . . .
Complete Report of Congressional Investigation

The Secret Service concluded that the investigation disclosed no evidence to indicate that the 12 missing certificates were intentionally removed from the main vault at the Bank. Mr. Tom Hansen, special agent in charge of the San Francisco office, reported that no guilty knowledge was developed and that it appeared probable that the certificates were inadvertently left in the used envelope when the other material was transferred and accidentally burned with the trash.

October 16. — The Treasury Department sent telegrams to all Federal Reserve banks and branches advising them to be on the lookout for interest coupons from the missing certificates covering interest to November 15, 1962.

October 18. — The audit review committee issued a report on "Securities Held in Safekeeping," conveying its observations about the need for better supervision in the fiscal department and also alluding to the heavy workload of the vault security custodians, and citing among other things the lack of trained and experienced personnel in the supervisory jobs immediately below the department head level.

November 1. — Mr. Swan reported to an executive session of the board of directors that the formal report of the Secret Service had been received, indicating that their investigation had been completed and had not turned up any evidence that any of their employees had any guilty knowledge about the missing certificates of indebtedness.

November 13. — The general auditor reported to the chairman of the board that the bonding company, the Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, had been advised of the disappearance promptly at the time of discovery and that their representative had indicated that they were fully satisfied with the steps taken and contemplated no special action on their own part.

November 29. — It was observed at the directors' meeting that coupons for the missing certificates were now some 2 weeks past due and had not been presented for payment.

March 22, 1963. — John R. Stark, member of the staff of the Banking and Currency Committee, noticed an entry concerning the missing certificates while reviewing the 1962 minutes of the directors' meeting, Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

March 27, 1963. — Examiner story appeared.

BASIS FOR FORMAL INQUIRY

Upon consideration of the foregoing facts, Chairman Patman concluded that formal inquiry was demanded. On April 4, 1963, he appointed a special subcommittee under the chairmanship of Hon. Henry S. Reuss to investigate the circumstances of the disappearance and report to the committee. The other members appointed to the subcommittee were Hon. Charles A. Vanik and Hon. Burt L. Talcott.

At that time Mr. Patman stated as follows:

> This is the biggest loss or disappearance in history and the committee would be shirking its duty if we did not look into it. The Federal Reserve System is, of course, an agency of Congress. It operates under a delegation of Congress constitutional power to issue money. Furthermore, any loss or unnecessary expense by a Federal Reserve bank comes out of the taxpayers' pocket, because it comes out of money that would otherwise be paid back into the Treasury.

At the request of Chairman Patman, the Comptroller General detailed a senior auditor, Mr. Leo Schimel, from his staff to work with the subcommittee staff. His separate opinion is included in this report. A hearing was held on April 22 at the Federal Reserve bank in San Francisco.

PART II

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. CUSTODIAL PRACTICES DEFICIENT

The report entitled "Apparent Inadvertent Destruction of Certain Treasury Certificates of Indebtedness at the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco," submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency by the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, on April 1, 1963, states in part as follows:

> The investigations made in connection with the disappearance of the certificates included a careful review of the Reserve bank's established procedures for the handling and safekeeping of securities. Such procedures appeared to be basically sound, with adequate internal control provisions.
> Testimony revealed that there were in fact deficiencies in the procedures governing the handling and safekeeping of securities and omissions in practice and supervision. These include:
> (1) Inadequate written instructions concerning transfer of securities.
> Regulations governing the transfer of securities from a used envelope, i.e., one having its face filled with notations, to a new one, were vaguely and uncertainly established in practice. Clarence Bertram, the vault custodian, testified that there were no written regulations requiring that he either tally the value of the securities being transferred, so as to be sure the total agree with the amount carried forward from the old to the new envelope and noted on the face thereof, or include the adding machine tape showing the total of the securities transferred into the new envelope. He indicated that he and the other custodians had evolved these practices themselves and that they had never been instructed to observe them by the bank officers. It should be noted that Mr. Bertram retired in October 1962, and he was not always able to recollect past practices with certainty.
> (2) No written instructions as to slitting old envelopes.
> The precaution of slitting and opening the old envelopes was likewise one apparently adopted by the vault custodians on their own initiative, without specific instructions of any superior.
> Mr. Reuss. I want, however, to return to the question I was asking Mr. Bertram, which is this . . . When you discarded an old envelope and opened a new envelope, you had to make sure that all securities were removed from the old envelope and put into the new envelope. Such practice was not embodied in any written regulation in the manual, was it?
> Mr. Bertram. No.
> Mr. Reuss. It was an instruction given to you orally?
> Mr. Bertram. I think it was our own. You can just call it commonsense.
> Mr. Reuss. Nobody ever told you to do this?
> Mr. Bertram. I am positive there is no instruction under that.
> Mr. Reuss. You have answered that there were no written instructions. But did any superior at any time during your 41 years in the Bank, and particularly your 15 years in the vault, instruct you by word of mouth that you were supposed to check that the envelope was empty of securities before you discarded it?
> Mr. Bertram. No, it was just commonsense on our own part in our work, knowing what to do in your work.
> Mr. Reuss. The discarding of the old envelope and the opening of a new envelope involved another practice, if I understand it. That practice required that the custodian add up the totals of the securities and enter that total on the new envelope as its first entry; is that correct?
> Mr. Bertram. No; that is the instruction now, but wasn't in the instruction then.
> Mr. Reuss. The present instruction to that effect is in writing; is that correct?
> Mr. Bertram. Yes.
> It is to be noted that Mr. Bertram, the senior vault custodian, testified at one point that he could not recollect ever having failed to slit an envelope. On another occasion, however, he testified that he slit the envelopes "99 times out of a hundred."
> (3) No requirement for listing securities.
> Prior to the August disappearance, there was no requirement for listing securities transferred from an old to a new envelope, either on the face of the new envelope or on a separate sheet to be included in it. This practice is now followed.
> (4) No requirement for quick visual check.
> The securities envelopes were not pierced to permit quick visual checking as to whether a discarded envelope contained securities. This practice is followed in most of the other Federal Reserve banks and has now been adopted

(5) Rule for inspecting waste loosely administered.

While there was a provision for the inspection and retention of waste, it appears to have been loosely administered and, at least part of the time, ignored. Moreover, the requirement set forth on page 53 of the "Manual of Miscellaneous Instruction," dated May 21, 1956, was contingent:

Waste paper should be scrutinized daily and held in sacks by dates for 30 days if storage facilities permit, when it should be burned on the premises if possible; if not, it should be disposed of with rubbish. (Bold face ours.)

(6) No requirement for keeping retired envelopes.

There was no requirement for retention of discarded envelopes until the next audit had been completed. This precaution, obviously would have prevented the destruction of the securities if the Bank's theory of the disappearance is correct. Significantly, at least one Federal Reserve bank preserves the faces of used envelopes as control cards, thus indicating the importance accorded them as a record of activity in the vault.

(7) No entry in vault journal.

Much reliance is placed on the vault journal as a control. This is a book kept in the vault for the purpose of recording all securities transactions, and the accounting department compares it at the end of each day with the securities ledger maintained upstairs. However, transfers from an old to a new envelope which do not involve transfers from one account to another are not indicated in the vault journal. Consequently, it was not possible to tell from any record whether the custodian transferred the securities in question or not.

Unfortunately, the envelope into which the 145 (or 157) pieces were transferred on May 31, 1962, was replaced on March 11, 1963, when the use of perforated envelopes was adopted; and this vital document, which should have borne the initials of the transferring custodian, has been destroyed with the others and therefore lost forever, to this committee's investigators or any others.

(8) Weak supervision.

There were clear indications of weak supervision. Mr. Bertram's testimony indicated that senior officers rarely came into the vault and that indeed only one official, Mr. Retallick, the assistant cashier, made visits with any degree of frequency. He testified that, although he had overlooked the practice of tallying totals of transferred securities as frequently as half of the time, he had never been corrected by any of his superiors.

Mr. Reuss. Now, as to the second practice, namely, totaling the securities in the old envelope and entering that total — after making sure it agreed with the total entered on the new envelope — did you always observe that practice?

Mr. Bertram: No; we did not.

Mr. Reuss. Did you generally observe it?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Reuss. What percentage of violation of the practice were you guilty of?

Mr. Bertram. I would say about 50 percent, about half.

Mr. Reuss. Those instructions were adopted after the disappearance of last summer: is that correct?

Mr. Bertram. Yes, sir.

Mr. Reuss. But prior to the issuance of these new instructions, there was a practice, was there not, of adding up the securities and posting their total on the new envelope?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Reuss. Were you ever told by any superior that this was part of your duties?

Mr. Bertram. No; no.

Mr. Reuss. Then when you say "a practice," what do you mean?

Mr. Bertram. It was our own practice.

Mr. Reuss. But nobody ever told you to do that?

Mr. Bertram. No.

Moreover, the auditors in their analysis reported that the custodians were overworked, thus creating a situation in which shortcuts, in the opinion of this committee, were virtually inevitable. The auditors also indicated a need for better supervision. The audit review committee minutes of October 18, 1962, indicate that the auditors' review after the loss resulted in observations as to the lack of proper supervision of fiscal department activities by the head and assistant head of that department, and also as to the heavy workload of the vault securities custodians.

(9) Overreliance on vault custodians.

During the semiannual audits, the two vault custodians were given the added burden of watching three or four auditors during the course of a security count that might take 2½ or 3 days. To the extent that their role as watchers represented one of the vault security safeguards, it strikes us as an unrealistic demand upon personnel. Two men cannot maintain an alert vigil for so long a period. Likewise, the requirement, stressed by bank officials as a security precaution, that "when two or more custodians or tellers are required to work in the presence of each other, each person should, at all times, be in a position to observe the actions of the others" seems equally unrealistic.

B. NEED FOR FURTHER IMPROVEMENT IN CUSTODIAL PRACTICES

It is to the credit of Mr. Swan and his associates that some of the deficiencies in custodial practices were quickly changed after the August 8 loss. The envelopes used for securities custody are now punched with ½-inch holes spaces at 3-inch intervals, so that any securities therein may easily be seen. Moreover, the manual has now been amended to require that the securities being transferred from an old envelope to a new one must be listed and inventoried by issue and denomination and signed by the custodian making the transfer, as evidence that the accounting was in fact made. The manual further requires that all envelopes be slit and retained by the custodians until completion of the next audit, after which they may be discarded. Custodians are also required to spread discarded papers and documents upon a dropcloth each night and examine them before permitting removal by the janitor. Finally, the waste-disposal provisions have now been elaborated to require retention for 30 days, without qualification.

There are other deficiencies, however, that remain uncorrected. For one thing, it would appear desirable to follow certain practices already adopted in some other Federal Reserve banks: having the identity and total value of transferred securities checked by another custodian who then initials the envelope along with the transferor and assumes responsibility for its accuracy. In the case of at least one Federal Reserve bank, securities transfers must be supervised by an officer.

There is no vault log to show who goes in and out of the vault. As a result, no one in the Bank is able to provide with certainty a list of all the people who have been in and out of the vault during any period of the past. It is extremely important, in this regard, to note that the newly adopted preacutions, necessary as they are in our opinion to encourage careful safekeeping and adequate records of securities transfers, are consistent with the theory adopted by the Bank that the securities were burned. As explained in more detail below, this committee is not convinced that the Bank's theory is more valid than any other and, for this reason, we think that more attention should be given to the vault, particularly to the recording of all entries and exits of bank personnel, and to more frequent inspection and supervision by officers of the Bank. Mr. Bertram indicated at one point in his testimony that it would have been possible for a custodian, if dishonest, to walk out with securities. We cannot forget that there is no actual evidence of accidental discard or burning. It is purely a circumstantial theory. Who was in the vault in the 6 months preceding the loss of the securities in addition to the custodians and the janitor? How sure are we really, that the securities did not get out of the Bank? (See sec. D, below, for a discussion of weaknesses in the Bank's hypothesis.)

C. THE INVESTIGATION OF THE LOSS WAS INADEQUATE

There has not been a thorough investigation of the possibility that someone in the Bank might have taken or sent the securities out, either wilfully or inadvertently. The Bank officials did not question employees to find out if they had any observations or information that would be helpful in finding out what might have happened to the securities. Instead, very heavy reliance was placed on investigation by the Secret Service.

Mr. Reuss. Then as far as you are concerned, the basis on which the Secret Service exonerated from being guilty the 18 employees whom they examined depends on the efficacy of the polygraph, does it not?

Mr. Swan: Yes. Would you repeat the question, please?

Mr. Reuss. As far as you are concerned, the basis on which the Secret Service found the 18 employees whom they examined not guilty rests on the effectiveness of the polygraph?

Mr. Swan. It rests on the fact that the Secret Service indicates this from the polygraph and whatever else they might have done.

Mr. Reuss. Do you yourself, Mr. Swan, have any expert knowledge of the polygraph device?

Mr. Swan. No sir.

The Secret Service in turn placed an inordinate reliance on the lie detector tests given to 18 employees. The vault custodians, who were obviously vitally concerned with the matter, were apparently not questioned in any detail about their observations or movements during the period in question, nor were the other people who might have been concerned or in a position to shed some light on the matter. Neither the auditors, who had been in the vault between May 15 and the time that the loss was discovered, nor any of the officers were given the lie detector test.

The special agent in charge of the U.S. Secret Service for the San Francisco district testified as follows:

Mr. Reuss. Am I right in concluding from your testimony, Mr. Hanson, that the results of the polygraph were the decisive elements in bringing you to the conclusion that none of the 18 people to whom the test was administered had stolen the securities or otherwise were implicated?

Mr. Hanson. That was a long question, but I believe I can answer that "yes."

Mr. Reuss. Did you understand it?

Mr. Hanson. Yes; I did. I think you want to know if I believed the polygraph, that the 18 people who took it did not steal the bonds.

Mr. Talcott. No; I think I got a different idea.

Mr. Reuss. Let me try the question again, because it was a long question.

You have come to the conclusion that none of the 18 people whom you have investigated as a result of this disappearance either stole the the securities or were otherwise guiltily implicated in this disappearance?

Mr. Hanson. Again, yes.

Mr. Reuss. And your principal evidence for that conclusion is the results of the polygraph tests, is it not?

Mr. Hanson. Well, that, together with what I regard as more or less an impossible feat of bringing the certificates out of that vault without being detected by any other person.

Mr. Vanik. Now, the examination that you gave, the lie detector test, what questions were directed to these 18 people, if you recall? Did you place the questions?

Mr. Hanson. I wasn't there.

Mr. Vanik. I can't ask you to testify. If you weren't there, you can't testify to this.

Mr. Hanson. Mr. Stringfield was there.

Mr. Vanik. What did you do, beyond this test, to complete your investigation of this case?

The Great Mystery . . .

Mr. Hanson. Besides going to the bank and talking to all the people?

Mr. Vanik. You went to the bank, and you went through the physical phases of the operation, and you also took the tests of the 18 people?

Mr. Hanson. That is right.

Mr. Vanik. In your opinion, that concluded a comprehensive investigation of all the circumstances surrounding the loss? Did you do any investigation of the people involved?

Mr. Hanson. Yes. We checked the bank accounts. We also made a background investigation.

Mr. Vanik. What else did you do beyond the test?

Mr. Hanson. We ran criminal record checks.

Mr. Vanik. Checks with the police department?

Mr. Hanson. That is right, of all persons involved; and at one time we did a complete check on one person.

Mr. Vanik. One person out of the 18?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Vanik. What else did you do?

Mr. Hanson. That is about it.

The committee considers such heavy reliance on the lie detector test, a check of police records, and apparently sketchy questioning to be far short of a complete and comprehensive investigation.

D. THE FEDERAL RESERVE'S THEORY OF INADVERTENT DESTRUCTION CONTAINS INHERENT WEAKNESSES

The Bank's hypothesis is summarized in the following quotation from the April 1 report:

The investigation disclosed no evidence indicating the 12 missing certificates of indebtedness were intentionally removed from the main vault at the Federal Reserve bank. Seventeen present and former employees given polygraph examinations, and no guilty knowledge established.

In view of the facts developed during the investigation and the results of the polygraph examination, it appears probable that the certificates were inadvertently left in the used envelope when the other material was transferred, and destroyed when instructions concerning the handling of the used envelopes and waste material were not followed to the letter.

This view depends essentially upon the conclusion that the vault clerk, Clarence Bertram, who had spent 40 years as a Bank employee, the last 15 of which were in the vault, accidentally failed to place the 12 securities in question in the new folder on May 31, 1962, when he transferred the other 145 securities from the old folder to the new; that he also failed to add up the value of the securities going into the new folder, to prove to the total entered on the new envelope; and that he then failed to tear open the envelope, to be sure that there were no securities inside it.

Moreover, during this time his partner, Mr. Carney, presumably failed to observe his omissions and correct him. Next in the chain of coincidental omissions was the apparent failure of the janitor to examine the wastepaper before burning it. Only by agreeing with this unique compounding of oversights and departures from practice can anyone possibly accept the Bank's theory of the case.

We see no compelling reason for concurring in this analysis. Bank officials rely on the supposition that Bertram failed to slit the envelope before discarding it. In his testimony, however, he showed considerable vacillation on the question of whether he could have failed to slit the envelope.

Mr. Vanik. Yes. Please tell us how you did it, in your own words.

Mr. Bertram. Well, we transferred the securities from one envelope.

Mr. Vanik. You lifted them out?

Mr. Bertram. We transferred the total out of the old envelope into the new envelope.

Mr. Talcott. The total of what?

Mr. Bertram. The total amount.

Mr. Vanik. How did you know that the enevlope was empty?

What did you do to find out?

Mr. Bertram. Well, until this time——

Mr. Vanik. What did you do before the new rule?

Mr. Bertram. Well, 99 out of 100 times I slit them down the side.

Mr. Vanik. Opened it right up?

Mr. Vanik. Opened it right up?

Mr. Vanik. Yes.

Mr. Vanik. Would someone be there with you at this time?

Mr. Bertram. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. Swan. The other custodian.

Mr. Bertram. The other custodian, but he wasn't watching me doing it.

Mr. Vanik. He wouldn't necessarily be watching you do it?

Mr. Bertram. No; not necessarily.

Mr. Vanik. So you would take the portfolio and simply tear it right open?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Talcott. May I interrupt? You said 99 out of 100 times, so I am wondering what you did the other 1 time; were there times you didn't do this?

Mr. Bertram. At this time I don't know whether I did or not.

Mr. Reuss. You don't ever recollect a time, I gather from your testimony, when you conscientiously did not slit open the envelope; is that correct?

Mr. Bertram. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. Talcott. If I understand this procedure, they just slit it open. They would sit at a table, and with their hands inside the envelope they would spread their hands very rapidly. This would slit the side, causing the seams to break on the side?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Talcott. Did you flip it up and take a look inside?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Vanik. When you got through it was one sheet of paper; am I correct?

Mr. Bertram. Yes; one sheet of paper.

Mr. Vanik. All the folds were torn open?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Vanik. Were the other custodians sitting there or standing there while this was being done?

Mr. Bertram. He would be right in there with you, and 9 times out of 10 he would be doing something else.

Mr. Vanik. Doing some other work?

Mr. Bertram. Some odd jobs, you know.

Mr. Vanik. And regarding this envelope on which there were many entries indicating the collateral that was inside, what happened to it after it was slit open?

Mr. Bertram. That went into the wastepaper basket.

Mr. Vanik. Did anyone check the notation which you made from one envelope to another to be sure they were identical?

Mr. Bertram. No.

Mr. Vanik. In other words, you took the new envelope and transferred such notations as you needed?

Mr. Bertram. Yes, sir.

Mr. Reuss. Just to recapitulate the practices: one, was to move all securities from the old envelope when they were put into the new envelope; two, count the securities, I presume by an adding machine tape, and enter that total, which should agree with the last total on the old envelope; three, slit the old envelope to doublecheck that everything has been removed.

Is that a fair statement of the practices in effect during the 15 years you were in the vault, and specifically during the period of May and June 1962?

Mr. Bertram. Yes, sir.

Mr. Reuss. As far as you know, you always obeyed the first of those practices; namely, making sure that you removed all of the old securities?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Reuss. At all times during your 15 years as a custodian; is that right?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Reuss. As far as you know, you always obeyed the third practice, namely, slitting the old envelope and inspecting it again to make sure that there was nothing in it; is that correct?

Mr. Bertram. That is correct.

Mr. Reuss. And I suppose, as to any specific transactions in May or June of 1962, you have no present recollection of whether you observed the practice of totaling the securities, or do you?

Mr. Bertram. No; I have no recollection.

Mr. Reuss. In fact, over the years you have had to open new envelopes, as you have testified, at least a thousand times; is that correct?

Mr. Bertram. Yes, sir.

At another point, the Bank counsel, Mr. Scott, questioned Bertram as to whether he ever tore an envelope in half after making a transfer. On this occasion he asserted that he always slit the envelope and never tore it.

Mr. Scott. Did you ever tear an envelope in half?

Mr. Bertram. As far as I recall, they were all split down the side.

Mr. Scott. Did you ever tear one this way (indicating)?

Mr. Bertram. That I don't know. I cannot say.

Mr. Scott. But you could have done it that way?

Mr. Bertram. I could have; yes.

Mr. Scott. You could have torn it from top to bottom?

Mr. Bertram. No; not that way. I always laid it on the desk and split it down the side.

Mr. Vanik. Why wouldn't you tear it in half?

Mr. Bertram. You couldn't open it up.

Mr. Vanik. There might be a security that would be torn?

Mr. Bertram. If you split it down the side, you couldn't tear anything?

Mr. Vanik. You wouldn't hurt the security if there was one in there?

Mr. Bertram. That is right.

Mr. Reuss. Isn't the reason for your practice of opening it up on the side to enable you to see everything inside of the envelope. If you were to tear it down the middle, which you testified you never did, a small security conceivably might have been hidden in there?

Mr. Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Reuss. But you never did that?

Mr. Bertram. I don't recall.

Mr. Reuss. You may be excused, Mr. Bertram, but we ask that you remain available.

It is now 11:48, and I think we have time for one more witness.

Mr. Scott. Could we ask Mr. Bertram one more question?

Mr. Reuss. Certainly.

Mr. Scott. During the course of the investigation, either in the last few days or since this disappearance, did you ever tell any officer or other employee in this bank that you sometimes tore an envelope from top to bottom?

Mr. Bertram. I think when I was talking to Mr. Barbonchielli, that is where he got the impression of it.

Mr. Scott. Did you tell him you did or did not?

Mr. Bertram. No: he must have misunderstood me at the time, because I said I split them right down the middle.

Mr. Scott. Well, you said 99 times out of 100. What did you do the other time?

Mr. Reuss. Just a minute, Mr. Scott. We are going to have to quote the witness accurately, and the statement you just made is not accurate. It is not consistent with the testimony of record, because as I recall it, the witness made no such unqualified statement.

Mr. Vanik. Why don't you ask him if he recalls doing it differently at any time.

Mr. Scott. Do you recall doing it differently at any time?

Mr. Bertram. Not that I know of. This time I might have cut it right in half or might not have.

Mr. Talcott. I certainly got the impression that he thought he did it 99 percent of the time in this manner, but there were sometimes he did it in some other manner.

Mr. Reuss. Let me clear this up.

Is it not your testimony that so far as you know it was your invariable practice to split the envelope in such a fashion that the entire innards of the envelope were bare, and that you never, so far as you know, deviated from that practice by such methods as tearing it down the middle?

Mr. Bertram. That is correct.

In view of Mr. Bertram's inability to recollect the securities transfer of May 31, 1962, the destruction of the key envelope bearing his notation is particularly distressing. It would be extremely helpful, as a means of refreshing his recollection about this transaction, to show him the beginning entry of $49,520,000 that he presumably made on May 31, 1962, to record the total transferred to the new envelope and to indicate that he did the transferring.

Mr. Swan testified that "there had been absolutely no evidence to indicate that the certificates were intentionally removed from the Bank's vault." It could be stated with equal authority, in our opinion, that there is no evidence to indicate that the certificates were accidentally discarded or burned. Any theory as to what happened necessarily will be based on inference.

On the stand, Mr. Bertrand agreed that he would not be startled were he to discover that the certificates had not been burned. He later indicated that he considered theft a more remote possibility than accidental destruction. We see no intrinsic reason why it is not just as plausible as not to assume that Mr. Bertram, with all his experience, did in fact place the securities in the envelope and that they were removed some time thereafter. There were several withdrawals from the envelope after May 31, 1962, and on two occasions deposits were made.

The envelope must have been taken out of its drawer on at least these occasions and exposed in the vault. The Bank officials make much of the fact that the securities in question are only 4 inches wide, and this point is emphasized as a reason why the custodian overlooked them in making the transfer. It appears to us that this same factor leads credence to the possibility that the securities may have been attached to some other larger securities removed from the vault pursuant to a withdrawal order from the owner.

While testimony on the subject is far from precise, as indicated in the excerpt below, we do not think that theft should have been ruled out entirely — although as the May 15 maturity date recedes it increases the probability either that the securities were destroyed rather than stolen, or that, if stolen, their possessors have been frustrated by publicity given the matter during the past 2 months.

SIERRA CLUB FIGHTS TO SAVE REDWOOD STAND

The Sierra Club has taken the lead in saving what is probably the last large stand of virgin redwoods remaining in the Bay Area. A great deal of encouragement and financial help has been given by others, but much more is needed before the purchase is completed.

The grove comprises 100 acres of redwoods in the Waddell Creek area near Big Basin Redwoods State Park, on which cutting rights were reserved by the Big Creek Timber Company when it sold its property to the Division of Beaches and Parks in 1961. At that time, funds to buy the land and the redwoods simply were not available. It was believed, however, that the land, even after the redwoods were cut, would offer some secondary park values, and the purchase was made.

Frank McCrary and his sons, Bud and Frank, Jr., who at one time owned this redwood tract, acquired the cutting rights from the Big Creek Timber Company, but they were reluctant to harvest this scenic redwood source if some plan could be evolved to save the grove. They therefore agreed to cut less desirable timber in the tract first to allow time to save the trees.

In a last-ditch effort, the Sierra Club, the Save-the-Redwoods League, State Senator Donald L. Grunsky, the California State Park Commission, the Division of Beaches and Parks staff, private philanthropies, and the timber owners have collaborated.

The owners set a price of $155,000 on the redwoods, about 10 per cent more than the price paid by the state for timber in 1961. On 4 May, the Sierra Club Board of Directors appropriated $10,000 from the club's McDuffie fund as the initial contribution toward making the purchase. Senator Grunsky then obtained the restoration of an old appropriation balance of $66,800 left over from the 1961 purchase. On 16 May, the State Park Commission worked out details whereby the Sierra Club would make the purchase and the $66,800 appropriation would be applied to it.

Word was spread about the need for funds and contributions were speedily received from the following major donors: Save-the-Redwood League, $25,000; San Francisco Foundation, $10,000; Varian Associates, $5,000; Jim Harkins, $500; Melvin Johnson, $500; Dorothy Erskine, $100; San Jose Mercury News, $100.

The timber owners agreed to an extended payment plan to provide time in which to raise the remaining $40,000, which the Sierra Club is now seeking to raise. If it should be necessary in order to protect the purchase, the Sierra Club intends to borrow the additional money and to use contributions, as they come in, to erase such indebtedness.

The Loma Prieta Chapter of the Sierra Club has started a fund-raising campaign, and many firms and individuals will be approached for donations (tax deductible). If you would like to contribute toward the purchase of a branch, a limb, a tree, an acre, or even the entire holding, make your check payable to "Sierra Club" and mark it "For Big Basin Redwood Trees." The address: 220 Bush Street, San Francisco 4.

Purchase of this stand of redwoods would complete protection of the northern watershed of the Waddell Creek and Berry Creek area, where there are several delightful waterfalls: Berry Creek, Golden, and Silver. This grove is uniquely beautiful, in a sloping canyon, along an unusually beautiful stream with many fern dells. It resembles the rain forests, because of the dense covering of trees, plants, and moss. Many of the trees, soaring to majestic heights, are probably a thousand years old.

THE BRITISH PEACE CORPS

It is paradoxical that Great Britain, reputedly more socialistically inclined than the U.S., still manages in many spheres to accomplish some things through private initiative which, in the United States are governmental functions. Slum clearance and mass housing are projects of private endeavor which the government enters only to the extent of insuring second mortgage money.

Another is Britain's equivalent of the Peace Corps. Organization of the British equivalent is almost entirely in the hands of voluntary agencies. A coordinating committee, called the Voluntary Assistance Committee for Service Overseas, has been set up, backed with about $280,000 in funds (how many million a year is the U.S. program costing?)

Foremost among the many organizations is Voluntary Service Overseas. V.S.O. negotiates with the overseas governments, religious organizations and other agencies which have requested volunteers. Since V.S.O. was established in 1958 some 600 volunteers have gone abroad under its auspices; in 1962-63 320 went to 50 countries.

Sending one volunteer abroad for a year costs on the average about $1,120 of which the Government provides half. The remainder is provided by various philanthropic foundations, schools, towns and industrial concerns. The management of the program, however, remains free of governmental administration.

New, later departure times on the Del Monte!

Beginning June 30, 1963, you can leave for San Francisco on the Del Monte at new, later departure times (below), and arrive San Francisco at 11:15 a.m. Why fight highway traffic when you can ride relaxed in a streamlined, air-conditioned Chair Car? The California Public Utilities Commission has directed that the new Del Monte schedule from Monterey to San Francisco, shown below, be placed in effect. We hope that our friends on the Monterey Peninsula will take greater advantage of this schedule and ride the Del Monte more often.

From A Librarian's Notebook

By Ruth Galvin Thornburg

We are a little short handed these days so if service is slow at the desk, don't complain too loudly. We have one person away in summer school, another going on vacation, a third called back east by illness in her immediate family, and as the straw that broke the you-know-what, we have a fourth person called for jury duty who will probably be playing insy-outsy for the next few weeks. There are times in every life when you can't win for losing, and this is one of the times.

An important book is going into circulation this week. In the preface we read, "What worries us is not the greater freedom of today's youth but rather the abdication of the rights and privileges of adults for the convenience of the immature. As a result, American society is growing down rather than up. This creeping disease leads to immature goals in music, art, and literature. It forces newspapers, television producers and movie makers to translate the English of adult usage into the limited vocabulary of the teen-culture. It opens up vast opportunities for commercial exploitation and thereby sets off a chain reaction which constantly strengthens teen-age tyranny." The book is called TEEN-AGE TYRANNY and it was written by a husband and wife team of writers, Grace and Fred Hechinger.

This problem of teen-age tyranny is a most important one today. This book should be read by all parents of small children because small children grow up into teenagers. For the parents of teenagers today, it may be too late, but they could read it and see clearly what is happening because of their weakness. The trouble is, they probably will not do so. Sir, or madame, is your son or daughter a revolting beatnik? This is the book for you.

The last 48 poems of Robinson Jeffers have been collected into a small volume entitled THE BEGINNING AND THE END. In these poems the eagle begins to fold his great wings. We shall keep one copy in our Carmel Collection for posterity.

Emily Hahn has done a history of China from the Opium War of 1842 to Mao Tse-tung and the present day, roughly from 1850-1950. The book is part of the Mainstream of Modern World Series edited by John Gunther. The title of the book is CHINA ONLY YESTERDAY.

For people who like this sort of thing, we have Elsa Maxwell's THE CELEBRITY CIRCUS. As for me, I would rather read a good mystery. We have also an appraisal of foreign programs for medical care which was written by Helmut Schoeck and entitled FINANCING MEDICAL CARE. With the cost of good medical care going up all the time, someone should come up with help in financing it, and compulsory health insurance may be the answer. The trouble is that cost of medical insurance goes up with added age and also the need to have more and more medical care at the same time, this state being arrived at just about the time the average person retires on a fixed income, which may or may not be adequate for his needs. Where do we go from there?

And finally, we have an excellent book on cooking entitled ECONOMY GASTRONOMY by Sylvia Thompson who says it is a gourmet cookbook for the budget minded. Aren't we all?

Letters . . . to The Editor

From The Chicago Trib

(Last week we printed a most complimentary letter from Mr. Earl W. Cornelius, a subscriber who lives in Naperville, Illinois, and owns a home in Carmel. Mr. Cornelius enclosed a clipping from the Chicago Tribune of an editorial entitled "Reply to a Country Editor." As we promised, we reprint it here.)

REPLY TO A COUNTRY EDITOR

The other day we reprinted, as a guest editorial, an article from the Macoupin County Enquirer, in Carlinville, Ill., about the problems of the editor of a country weekly newspaper. The slick city journalist, wrote W. L. Schmitt, has no idea what the country editor is up against.

For example, he says, the man from the city probably would not think it worth reporting on page one that "the sun peaked out a few times Wednesday." People already know it, he would say, not realizing that the more people already know what's printed in a paper the more people will respect the editor. "They have to admit that he knows as much as they do."

We suspect that most metropolitan editors would like nothing better than to be able to report that the sun peaked out Wednesday, and that Mrs. Jones' dog had puppies, and that life is going on pretty much as usual in spite of Castro, the crime syndicate, reckless drivers, and crooked politicians. But such is not our lot.

We beg Mr. Schmitt to contemplate the following editorial which once appeared in the Boston Herald:

"The managing editor is always before the court. He is not protected by double jeopardy. Each edition is a new trial, every new story has its own judgment.

"And he is tried on page one. He has no privacy, no chance to cover up a mistake. A decision of a moment becomes the record of history.

"He is no specialist, but must be familiar with all of life. Crime and politics, sports and fashions, fact and opinion, humor and tragedy, economics and law all pass thru his hands every 24 hours.

"He must weigh them and play them. There can be no hesitation and no escape. When he is successful he has the satisfaction, not of a lifetime but of an hour — until the next edition."

The Sur Coast

By ELIZABETH FULLER JONES

A starlight hike from Hiding Camp on the Upper Carmel River to Pine Valley, in the Ventana Wild Area of the Los Padres National Forest was a highlight of the Girl Scout burro pack trip which ended last Monday at upper Terrace Creek in Big Sur.

Thirteen qualified girls, a waterfront director, two counselors, guide, six pack animals and a dog left the Ventana Pack Station in upper Palo Colorado Canyon on 15 June for a pack-burro trip into the wilderness areas of the Santa Lucia, which, for many, was a unique and memorable experience.

The group hiked via the Turner Creek Trail, up Devil's Peak and on to Pat Springs for the first camp. The following day's travel took them via Little Pine and down the Puerto Suello Trail to Hiding Camp on the Upper Carmel River. Within the first few days of the annual burro pack trip, the girls were experiencing much of what had been described in the 1963 Girl Scout Summer Activities brochure issued early this year by the Monterey Peninsula Council of Girl Scouts, Inc., wherein the trip was described as an opportunity to hike and camp in the wonderful Santa Lucia Mountains, cross rivers, follow canyons and mountain streams, see the beautiful and rare Santa Lucia fir, listen to the music of wind in the trees and the distant sound of night creatures.

Several days were spent at Hiding Camp in swimming, fishing, reading and exploring. An afternoon was spent river walking up to the lower Ventana Creek Falls and swimming in a deep pool near the point where the Ventana Creek flows into the Carmel River.

The starlight hike was planned to give the girls experience, the confidence to move in the wilderness at night. It began after dinner, about 8, followed the Hiding Canyon Trail into the well-known broad, green pine surrounded valley. It was a colorful scene as the pack train and the hikers moved up the canyon happily, confidently, each carrying a flashlight for use when there was a need for it. The camp at Pine Valley was reached at 11 p.m. As the girls chose their bed sites and quickly made their beds, counselors prepared hot chocolate and cookies for a midnight snack.

The two days spent at Pine Valley were cold, with cloud cover, too cold for swimming but delightfully pleasant for exploring the surrounding area.

Sykes and Barlow Flat camps on the Big Sur River were the last two stops on the trip, before the final hike up Terrance Creek and out to waiting family and friends.

These burro pack trips, for seventh and eighth grades and senior scouts, were begun three years ago when those who know these wilderness areas conceived the idea and wished to share their love and enthusiasm with Girl Scouts.

The groups are guided by Anthony Zufich, owner of the Ventana Pack Station and Ventana Trail Trips, a man of broad experience in working with children, as a school teacher in Alaska, as guide and counselor for numerous groups of children and young people on back country trips. Last summer Mr. Zufich returned to Alaska taking with him a group of teenage boys for a two months-camping adventure in the Alaskan wilderness.

On this and former trips, the girls learn to care for the burros, saddle them, feed them, pack them; and as Cocoa, George, Red, Snorter, Rosa and Whitie move about the camp or are carrying gear and food from camp to camp, they are showered with attention and affection.

Kinki, the handsome German Shepherd dog, is seldom far from her master, Mr. Zufich, and is ever on the alert to help round up burros, give notice of the nearness of a boar or deer, snakes ahead on the trail, or a stranger approaching camp.

The 14 girls taking part in this trip from the Monterey-Carmel area were Patricia Aldrich, Cheryl Cope, Christina Concolino, Jean and Cecilia Galloway, Janice Eding, Constance Gilmore, Melissa Lofton, twins Pamela and Patricia Ostrom, Patricia Omer, Donna Stentz and Suzanna Moore. Valerie Whitworth, June honor graduate from Carmel High School directed waterfront activities.

Mrs. Nancy Lofton and Miss Elizabeth F. Jones, counselors, brought to the trip their combined experiences of working with young people and years of hiking, camping and exploring wilderness areas.

The success and growing popularity of these pack trips is attributed, in large measure, to the long-range, careful planning of the complete program. Early this year, Mrs. Harold Aldrich, troop camping chairman; Elizabeth F. Jones and Anthony Zufich mapped the trails and camping areas, individual equipment list for those taking part in the trip, daily menus, food lists, etc.

A typical breakfast menu consists of fresh eggs, bacon, pancakes, cooked fruit (served hot), milk, chocolate and coffee. Dinner menus are designed so that even on the last day, there is a fresh vegetable or two. On the ninth day out, for instance, the dinner consisted of a boiled dinner with ham, fresh potatoes, carrots, onions, cabbage, split pea soup, freshly baked cake (frosted), jello and beverages. When time permits, bread is baked for the following day's lunches, and each noon there is included in the lunch a piece of fresh fruit, an apple or orange, celery and carrot sticks.

There were many expressions of appreciation for the excellent trails and camping facilities found during this 10-day wilderness trip. At Pat Springs, a large covered, wooden tank has been installed at the springs. Sanitary facilities have been greatly improved this past year at Pat Springs, Hiding Camp and Pine Valley and the Puerto Suello and Hiding Canyon Trails, cleared, widened and made safer for travel. The splendid work done by the personnel of the United States Forest Service in these particular areas added immeasurably to the enjoyment of the group during their visit to this treasured part of the wilderness.

First Church of Christ, Scientist, Carmel
Monte Verde St., north of Ocean Avenue between 5th and 6th
Sunday services 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.
Sunday School at 11:00 a.m.
Wednesday Evening Meeting 8 p.m.
Reading Room: 7th and Monte Verde. Open week days 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., except Wednesday when it closes at 7:30 p.m. Open Sunday and holidays.

JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES from Carmel will attend the Watchtower Convention at the County Fairgrounds in Watsonville this weekend. Francis Goetz, presiding minister of the Pacific Grove congregation who heads the delegates from here, urged all of the local ministers to attend and share in the spiritual good things of the three-day assembly. "Witnesses from 18 congregations in California Circut No. 1, which covers the section from Campbell to San Luis Obispo, have been invited as well as all interested persons."

West Coast supervisor, A. L. Borchardt, sets the theme of the three-day meeting Friday, 28 June, at 6:45 p.m. with the address of welcome, "Right Kind of Ministers."

Francis Goetz who lives south of Carmel in the Palo Colorado Canyon, will be used as an instructor on Saturday's program. William Smolley, his assistant, and Gary Goetz, in charge of the local ministry school, will be used on Friday's ministry school. David McCabe, who directs the Witnesses in their home Bible study activity in Carmel, will speak on "Disciplined Steadfastness" Sunday at 4:30 p.m. A convention administrative post is being filled by William Lang of Carmel who directs the door-to-door ministry for the local group. He will oversee the baptism of new ministers at Watsonville after counsel on the importance of this step by Borchardt.

Gray Re-Appointed

Rev. K. Fillmore Gray was reappointed to the pulpit of Carmel's Church of the Wayfarer at the recent six-day annual conference of the Methodist Church.

Principal actions taken during the session by the more than 700 ministerial and laymen members of the annual session included:

Employment of Dr. Frank Webber of Mill Valley as the first administrative secretary of the conference, a new executive position.

Adoption of a program of adult education in churchmanship to be carried out in 66 Christian Growth Conferences in all districts of the church in October and November.

Acceptance of a 1963-64 conference budget of $1.8 million to conduct the administrative and benevolence programs which the churches support in addition to their local programs.

Election of 14 delegates to the general conference of Methodism in 1964 at Pittsburgh, where Methodist policy and law is established. Negro pastor Roy H. Nichols of Oakland received the highest vote total. The delegation will be headed by Webber.

Created a committee on mental health instructed to cooperate with California mental health associations, an action based on the suggestion of Bishop Tippett in his annual "state of the church" message.

Expressed Methodist social concerns by sending four wire messages to government leaders; to President Kennedy commending his stand against atmospheric testing; to Alabama Governor Wallace regretting his stand against negro students; to California state senators urging the fair housing bill he brought out of committee; and to Governor Brown requesting he veto any legislation that would open up gambling.

Adopted a resolution calling on every church of the conference to consider entering into an "open pulpit covenant" declaring that race will not be a consideration in the acceptance of appointed ministers.

electricity generated by the symbolic gesture activated servo-mechanisms in the Department's new Digital Identity Center, setting in motion the computing and punch card machines which will henceforth provide identity designations for all Americans, under the law recently enacted by Congress (against the strong protests of Senator Ted Kennedy) intended to wipe out the last remnants of inefficiency and inexactitude in the United States.

The Federal System Supervisor for Carmel (545-08-546), announced today that he would commence at once to issue new identity designations, and one $25 savings bond, to everyone who came in and turned in their old-fashioned names.

(545-08-546) stressed the importance of everyone in Carmel learning everybody else's I.D. and using it in conversations.

(The scene, a cocktail party)

"Lived in 93921-by-the-Sea very long?"

"No. As a matter of fact, we just arrived last month."

"Oh. Where from?"

"92855."

"No! I used to know a fellow there, chap by the name of 254-012-665; fellows around the office used to call him 665. It was always good for a laugh."

"What did he do?"

"He was a 7-88-45-872."

"Really? How strange. So am I — well, actually, I'm an 872A. Did some post-graduate work. But I can't say I recall this fellow."

"Well, that's entirely possible. I guess 92855 has grown quite a bit since then — you know, when they called it Los Angeles."

"What's that?"

"What?"

"Los Angeles."

"Oh, it's the way they used to name places."

"I don't understand. What's it mean?"

"Hard to say. By the way, did you watch that ball game? That team of yours. Wow! That 435-896-721, he can really pitch. But there's one fellow who practically owns him. You know, 423-605-something-or-other. Oh, what's his desig? He plays for the BB268s?"

"You don't mean -588?"

"Yeh. Terrific. They'll go all the way to the pennant, if he holds out."

"Excuse me, but who's that girl across the room, over there? The one with the Formula 44a hair."

"Enchanting, isn't she? I met her last night. She's from Rome, I mean E15. I believe her name is XVIILMC. She's going to work for a 7-89-555-4. She's sort of a 38-34-36, if you ask me. Got her phone number, if you're interested. Here, write it down. 1-415-876-44876987.

"Never mind, I can remember it."

"Heard a cute story."

"Oh?"

"Yeh. This traveling 8-664-322 walked up to this 1-232-214's daughter and said, 'pardon me, but you look just like my 308.' "

"Ha! That's good."

"I thought so."

"I wonder where old '344' is. I could use another drink. How about you?"

"Sure. Make mine a 215 on the rocks. Meanwhile, I think I'll see if I can introduce myself to that cute thing from E15. I speak her language. 'XCVIL. MCLVII? IVMCLXX!"

"You'll be a cinch with an accent like that. She'll think you're a native."

"Oh, by the way, I don't think I caught your desig."

"Of course not. Excuse me. I'm 201-189-678. Here's my card . . . that's strange. I thought I had some business cards with me."

"Oh, that's all right. I may forget your face, but I never forget a number. What did you say it was?"

Next week, Genesis: "1 begat 2; 2 begat 3; 3 begat 4 . . ."

I'm 234-012-567. Who are you?

Among The Pines

A Working Vacation

Fred McGaughey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul I. McGaughey of Carmel and sophomore at La Verne College, will spend his vacation participating in the Church of the Brethren Summer Service Program. He will work at the Bar 41 Children's Ranch near Cle Elum, Washington, and will be active in the local church.

San Joaquin Refugees

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford A. Mettler of Bakersfield have opened their Pebble Beach home for the summer season. They plan sporadic flights from the farenheit of the Valley to the coolness of Carmel.

Mr. Mettler is a rancher; his wife Pat includes among her activities philanthropic organizations and gourmet cooking. Their favorite recreations in the vicinity: golf, picnicking along the coast, candid camerey and deer-watching from their terrace. The latter are generally doing an expert pruning job on the plants the Mettlers have brought with them from their home.

Symphony Symposium

Last weekend representatives of the Monterey County Symphony and its associated guilds attended the eighteenth annual convention of the Ameircan Symphony Orcestra League in San Francisco, the first time that the organization has convened on the West Coast. In attendance were Monterey County Symphony Conductor John Gosling and Mrs. Gosling, Mr. H. G. Royal, newly elected symphony president; Mrs. Guy L. Cochran, symphony publicity director; Mrs. Frank G. Ringland, president of the Monterey Peninsula Symphony Guild and Mrs. Cal McKnelly, president of the Salinas Symphony Guild.

Mrs. John Gosling participated in a special capacity as chairman and moderator of a session for wives of conductors and managers.

Participants in the 54 hole, 3 day tournament will relax and discuss what should have been done with what club on which hole at the Royal Lahaina Club, nearby the new championship Robert Trent Jones designed golf course.

Representing the Monterey Peninsula Golf Club will be Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bunn, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Drummond and Mr. Jay Harris.

Antiquity Abounds

The event is under the auspices of the Alliance Francaise and is open to all interested persons.

Sheriff of Stanford

Susanne Byrne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Byrne, is representing Carmel High School at the 20th annual California Girls' State now in session at the University of California, Davis campus.

Susan is sponsored by Unit 41, District 28 of the American Legion Auxiliary in a program which has received the Freedom Foundation medal of honor, endeavors to indoctrinate the participants in all phases of state, county and local government, and which seeks out participants on the basis of their qualifications in leadership, scholarship and interest in government.

To Each His Own

Born in Carmel last week, the following heirs and heiresses: Susannah Caine, to Mr. and Mrs. Peter C. Dau of Carmel; Christopher Francis, to Mr. and Mrs. Roger B. Falge of Carmel Valley; Eric Alexander, to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stein of Carmel; a little girl, to Mr. and Mrs. Maurice A. Urquidi, of Pebble Beach; Coleen Ann, to Mr. and Mrs. Bradley T. Wayland of Pacific Grove.

Major Boylan Graduates

Major James F. Boylan, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul C. Boylan, has just completed the 38-week U.S. Army Command and General Staff College course at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Designed to prepare select U.S. Army officers for duty as commanders and general staff officers at division, corps and field army levels, the course is also attended by members of the other armed forces and the forces of allied nations.

Boylan is a graduate of Carmel High School ('44) and West Point ('50).

Music, Fun and Music

Carmel's Studio Restaurant and Theatre opens its sixth summer musical season Wednesday, 3 July, with its production of "Bye Bye Birdie."

Produced by Betty Hackett Martin and Royden Martin, it was written by Michael Stewart, with music and lyrics by Charles Strouse and Lee Adams. The musical, satirizing teenagers, is under the direction of Betty Hackett Martin and Clifford Berry. Musical director and accompanist is Gary Carver. Scenic design for the production is by Ruth Jordan Allan, and choreography by Dale Lefler. It will play nightly at 8:30, except Monday. Dinner is served from 6:30 to 7:30.

The Studio's second offering, which alternates weekly, is Jerry De Bono's musical comedy revue, "Here We Go Again!" opening 26 July.

WHERE THERE'S LIFE . . .

By Andre Hope

There has got to be the Fourth of July! And bang! And what is Independence Day without picnics — red ants, white skins turning rosy in the sun and blue chills after the sun goes down and the rockets go up?

So — picnic: Enough of the esoteric, exotic or even the incinerated wienies and marshmallows to say nothing of the singed eyebrows of the people trying to toast them. A simple, plain-old-fashioned basket lunch is the easiest answer, and you can always add your own sand . . . My usual menu (aside from fireworks, long matches, bandaids, burn lotion, insect spray and a secret potion in which darts can be dipped to heave playfully at lit-tel children who delight in flinging firecrackers like lethal rose petals in your path) goes thusly — Shrimps, boiled in their shells with salt, tarragon, pepper, a little water and some beer . . . Fried chicken and/or roast spareribs . . . corn on the cob, potato salad, cold cut salad, vegetable salad with bedeviled eggs, bread and butter sandwiches (try rye, sour dough or pumpernickel) and melons that can be cut on the spot.

There is also a punch composed of cranberry juice, lime juice and vodka. Leave out the latter for the young and add gingerale. Don't forget hot coffee. A nice addition to the potato salad is crumbled bacon or diced ham. Cold cut salad is made by combining finely diced ham, left-over roast, bologna, salami and cheddar or jack cheese, add a few pickled onions of the cocktail variety, some capers (if you like 'em) and pickles cut match stick size. Mix a little prepared mustard with mayonnaise and bind the whole mess with it. We never seem to have any of this left over. Vegetable salad combines any cooked (or canned) and chilled vegetables of your choice (except not beets, please; they turn everything an unmentionable color of pink). Use a few sliced radishes and chopped olives. Toss in french dressing and mix thoroughly with sour cream or mayonnaise. Don't forget in deviling eggs to use some melted butter and mustard, curry or horse-radish for tang. The best way to keep ribs and/or chicken hot, we find, is to line a box or basket with aluminum foil; wrap each portion in aluminum foil as it comes from pan or oven and stack them in the conveyance. This also includes the corn, which we roast a respectable distance from the broiler, desilked but still in the husks and thoroughly dampened. Don't forget plenty of napkins, soft butter or margarine and easy to shake salt and peppers. Oh yes — and the fireworks!

CARMEL VALLEY

MEMOIRS OF JOE HITCHCOCK

By Marion Crush

Unfortunately, much of our history has been lost, as have some of our landmarks which have been torn down by the hand of destruction in the guise of progress.

Included in our historical losses is the dialect of the Indians of this area. My aunt, Isabelle Meadows, was the last one to be taught many words of the dialect by her mother, Loretta Meadows.

My aunt was born the day the Stars and Stripes were raised over the Custom House in Monterey. She was taken back to the Smithsonian Institute to record what she knew of the language. Some time ago, Roy Meadows told me the only words he remembered were those of an Indian lullaby sung by Loretta, our grandmother, and the heroine of "CATHEDRAL IN THE SUN," by Anne Fisher. The Indians and the dialect have all died. Many of them died because they would drink too much and lay out in the cold. Eventually, after not eating, too much drinking, and cold nights, they would get consumption.

Since I was raised in Carmel Valley and still live here, I'd like to tell you about the property and some of its early owners. As you know, the early ownership of land in California was acquired through land grants by the Spanish and Mexican governments. Some of the privileged families received more than one grant. The first authority for granting lands in California was given to Commandante Rivera y Mondaca when he was appointed to office. The first of 16 large grants in this area was given to Manual Butron, a soldier of the Monterey Presidio, who married an Indian neophyte named Margarita Maria. The grant was near the Carmel Mission.

In Carmel Valley there were five large tracts of land given, approximately from where Highway One is today to considerably east of the Village. The first one, geographically, was the Hatton Place. Starting at the highway was the St. John's Ranch, which terminated at Canada de la Segunda, approximately where the Valley Hills Shopping Center is today.

When I was a boy it was run by William Hatton. He had two dairies on the tract. There were two artesian wells on the ranch with which he irrigated alfalfa and rye grass. Mr. Hatton was born in Ireland and took to the sea when he was only 13 years old. He spent seven years at sea, working his way up from cabin boy to first mate. Endowed with a fantastic amount of energy and intelligence, Mr. Hatton, not only ran his own dairy business, but managed the Los Laurelos Tract for the Pacific Improvement Company for 12 years. When he died at the age of 45, he had already accomplished more than most in the usual life span. He left a widow and seven children.

The ranch consisted of 2200 acres and a herd of 600 dairy cows. After Mr. Hatton's death, Mrs. Hatton's brother, John Harney took over management of the estate. He did an excellent job of management. The large family home was under construction at the time of Mr. Hatton's death and was occupied shortly afterward. It can be seen today overlooking the west end of the valley.

When William Hatton passed away, everyone wondered who would be his successor at the Los Laurelos. Mr. John J. Hebbron was appointed. Many years later when Will Hatton's oldest son grew up, he, too, managed the tract for the Pacific Improvement Company. Ed Hatton carried on just as his father did before him, running his own dairy as well as the P.I. Company's land and dairy.

The Hatton name is an indelible one in Carmel Valley. Mrs. Hatton never tired of helping the last remnants of the poor old Carmel Valley Indians.

The next large tract of land was the Meadows Ranch about which I'll speak in the next installment.

THE DAY . . .

ery store (oops!) unstocked, illicit and unadvised.

WE'RE ON YOUR SIDE

The Pine Cone is strictly against this. We want you to be licit, and so, we have appealed to our bon vivantess, Andre Hope, who has burrowed into the cellars of Howard Brunn's Entry Pot (Fleet Street for Entrepot, with a squiggle over the 'O') and we have come up with a handy little kit you may wish to prepare against the time when you hear a malevolent tick-tick-ticking in your back yard.

GOURMET DISASTER KIT

One case of Dom Perignon champagne; a large bloc of pate de foie gras, Perigord (well truffled); two tins of Romanoff Malassol caviar (eat soon, because they do not keep well unrefrigerated); a case of Richebourg '59, Chateau d'Yquem and Chateau Latoure '59; an assortment of melba toast, tea biscuits and crackers; a jar of Bar le Duc and Grey's chutney, to accompany tinned fowl; a herd of Danish hams cured in sherry (or Scotch, port, corn whiskey); jars of tiny shrimp and smoked oysters; cans of hearts of palm; an emergency tool kit—corkscrews, swizzle sticks, toothpicks, flat silver, chafing dish — and bottled water for mixed drinks; a package of mushroom culture. So that you can breed your own little cloud. Inside the shelter, where it can have you all to itself.

BAN-THE-BOMB LOW CALORIE DIET

If the Gourmet Disaster Kit strikes you as terribly urbane and frivolous, and you go around with a severe look on your face and a cryptographic medal dangling on your bosom bearing a symbol not unlike the footprint of a club-footed crow, you wouldn't be found dead in a fallout shelter.

You would be found dead out in the open.

But, in case you had last-minute conflicts of interest and decided to head for the nearest Purity (there we go again) shelter — we hasten to acknowledge, only to lure those inside into the open — you might want to go prepared with our No Nonsense Enlightened Liberal Survival Kit:

Distillate of boiled-out table cloth; 1 dozen poppy seeds; the aroma of an empty custard pie tin; a picture of a boullion cube; the hole from one doughnut (as you wander on through life, brother); 6 oz. of righteous conviction; a book of Blue Chip Stamps and the Lord's Prayer.

If neither of these appeal to you, you are a Carmelite.

"Someone's been putting ads in my puzzles," said Tom, plugging away quizzically.

Q: What personal thing does everyone have yet only sees face-to-face once a year?

A: Their birthday. (For paper favors, see The Party Carousel)

Q: What is personal, yet must be given away before it is used?

A: A card. (For the best selection, see The Wood Shed)

Q: What has the name of those shops on it that people use every day?

A: Their door mats. (Which, incidentally, may be ordered with the name of any business, residence, motel, or family)

"Ordered . . . Where?" said Tom, searching productively.
